Camp Mud offers a great introduction to working with clay for budding potters and clay artists aged 9 to 14. We help develop skills in throwing on the potter's wheel as well as a variety of hand-building techniques.

The instructor gives a solid grounding in pottery fundamentals. On the wheel, students are taught how to center a mound of clay and later how to throw, trim and glaze their pots. All will learn how to make cups, bowls and other simple forms. With handbuilding, they will explore making functional and decorative objects.

Students should dress in clothes you don't mind them getting dirty, trim long fingernails short and tie back long hair. Also they should bring an old towel for wiping their hands. (Towels are also available for rent at $1.00 each time.)

Classes are held at Hinckley Pottery's studio in historic Georgetown, next door to the venerable Blues Alley Jazz Club.

The week-long sessions begin on June 25; the final week ends on July 27. The fee for each session (morning or afternoon) is $250.00 and includes the cost of clay, materials and firing. For a full day of classes, choose both morning and afternoon. Camper brings a bagged lunch. There are no classes on July 4th; the fee for that week is $200.00 (morning or afternoon).

Full payment is required at registration. Early registrations made through April 30, receive a 10% discount. Hinckley Pottery reserves the right to cancel a session if enrollment does not reach a minimum of five students. Maximum class size is 10. There are no refunds for registrations cancelled less than three weeks before the session begins. There are no refunds for absences. If a session is cancelled because of insufficient enrollment, Hinckley Pottery will make a full refund.
